First News Story

On Wednesday afternoon Baylor students gathered on campus for the Career Center's annual Career Fair to network with potential employers in all different fields.

Each semester the Career Center hosts a Career Fair where students in all fields of study can seek professional jobs and internship opportunities with over 120 different organizations that attend this event. This provides students access to professional opportunities, as well providing organizations with a way to seek out potential new employees.

"I think it's really helping me rub shoulders with people and figure out who I want to intern with and who I don't, and who I might want to get a job with later," Chisholm Gould, sophomore from Texas, said.

Gould said he was pleased with the wide variety of organizations Baylor brought in for their students to meet.

"I was looking at the list and there was a wide span from technology, medical, nonprofits, really everything."

Senior Jalyn Lechner from California said that she was grateful for the wide variety of organizations to talk to, as well as for the experience it provided her.

"I think it is helping me grow as it is helping me learn how to talk to professionals about myself and not feeling bad about talking about myself because we all have work to get to that point," Lechner said. "It's also helping me have a more professional conversation."

The organizations are also grateful for this event, as it provides them with an opportunity to recruit quality employees for the future.

Hannah Alvarez of Texas Health and Human Services said that she hopes to find quality, hard working students that are open about their strengths and show excitement to learn from others.
